This is ARCO

Four divisions of the Atlantic Richfield Company have been active in Montana. They are the ANACONDA Minerals Company, ARCO Metals Company, ARCO Exploration Company and ARCO Oil and Gas Company.

Primary operations of ANACONDA Minerals are in Butte where the company mines 42,000 tons of copper-molybdenum ore per day at its East Berkeley open pit mine. Both the copper ore, which has a low grade of one-half of one per cent, and the molybdenum ore, at .04 per cent, are treated at the Butte Concentrator.

ANACONDA Minerals was incorporated in 1895 as the Anaconda Copper Mining Company, but can trace its activities back even further to the 1870s. At one time, copper ore mined in Butte was of very high grade, but as the grade began to decline, the underground workings were phased out. The Berkeley Pit was opened in 1955 to allow bulk removal of low-grade material. Since 1976, all mining operations in Butte have been open pit.

The company expanded into the aluminum business in 1955 with the startup of its reduction plant at Columbia Falls, presently known as ARCO Aluminum Company. Capacity at that time was 67,500 tons annually of aluminum ingot.

The plant was expanded in 1965 to 100,000 tons and again in 1968 to 180,000 tons. This tonnage, combined with an equal amount produced at a company operation in Sebree, Kentucky, placed ARCO Aluminum, a division of ARCO Metals Company, fifth among U.S. Producers.

In 1980, Columbia Falls completed a $42 million modernization program which brought the plant into compliance with Montana fluoride emission standards and reduced electrical consumption by 15 per cent.

Both the mining operations and aluminum plant were acquired by Atlantic Richfield Company in 1977.

Since then, Atlantic Richfield has conducted additional activities in the state through two of its other operating companies, ARCO Exploration and ARCO Oil and Gas, which survey potential future projects.
